Telephone Tip

Have you cleaned your telephone lately? You may not think about it, but your telephone may harbor a multitude of germs. Not only do you have to touch the phone everyday but it probably comes in contact with your mouth at some point from time to time potentially facilitating the transfer of these germs. Phone handsets are covered in more bacteria than shoes, door handles or toilets, according to various studies. Tens of thousands of bacteria can live on each square inch of a phone, including Staphylococcus aureus, which can cause pimples or boils, and even pneumonia and meningitis. You can fight these microscopic invaders by cleaning your phone with an anti-bacterial cleaning solution. Just remember, never spray anything directly on the phone or the handset, just spray the cleaner onto a lint-free cloth and then gently wipe down the phone paying extra attention to the handset.
